Route 66 – Travelogue

For each state you must create at least two separate entries in your “Travel Journal”. Each entry must include a specific reference to one element of the terrain and one reference to a particular food. These are minimum requirements and may be exceeded in your entry. It is required that you refer to actual locations along Route 66 in your journal. These creative pieces, although allowed to take the form of journal entries, must be completed using proper grammar and be written in complete sentences. It is also required that you include at least one image with each entry. The initial assignments represent rough drafts, but they will be graded as if they are final copies. This means that I expect them to look good but that, by the time the final project is handed in, they will look even better. Each entry should be approximately one page in length. Your first assignment, which you will begin now, is for the state of Illinois. Make sure that you create two entries. Make sure that each entry references at least one different spot on Route 66 and at least one different food. You may use your notes and any electronic medium at your disposal to work on this assignment. You may, but are not required to, create a character/narrator for the travelogue. Or, if it’s easier, you may write in the first person point of view and use yourself as the narrator. Describe what you see as you travel. Describe where you are and what you experience. Describe the foods and what make them unique. Be creative. Be accurate.
